Public Awareness Ideas and Strategies for Professional Counselors

For use during Counseling Awareness Month and throughout the year

The Professional Counselor: Integrating Practice & Science with Client Advocacy

American Counseling Association
Office of Professional Resources & Special Projects public awareness and support committee
2004

Dr. Jan Bartlett, Chair
C. Bret Hendricks
Dr. Cher Igelman
Dr. Herbert Nieburg
Dr. Azara Santiago-Rivera
Edil Torres-Rivera
Wendy Stubbs
Michael Rankins (Student member)

office of professional services
& special projects

5999 Stevenson Avenue • Alexandria, VA 22304
(800) 347-6647

Janice Macdonald, Director, (x204), jmacdonald@counseling.org
Jean Gaskins, Coordinator, (x336), jgaskins@counseling.org
Celebrating Counseling Awareness Month

Promoting Public Awareness in April and Throughout the Year

The Importance of Defining Clear Objectives

Participating in Professional Organizations

Group Participation in Civic and Charitable Activities

Participating in National Screening Day Initiatives

Delivering Speeches and Presentations

Speaking at Meetings of Community Organizations

Sponsoring Workshops for Groups of Professionals

Partnering with Public Libraries

Delivering Workplace Presentations

Teaching an Adult Education Class

Tips for Making an Effective Presentation

Working with the Media

Understanding Media Professionals

Targeting Your Media Efforts

Building a Media List

Sending Out News Releases

Sending Photographs

Using the Fax Machine

Writing News Releases for Radio

Following Up by Telephone

Respecting Media Deadlines

Developing a Media Kit

Sending Media Advisories

Using Public Service Announcements

“Pitching” Feature Story Ideas to the Media

Working with Television

Working with Radio

Conducting an Interview

Writing Letters to the Editor

Participating in Counseling Awareness Month

Participating in Other Counselor Commemoratives

Participating in Other Commemoratives Throughout the Year

Helpful Resources for Use in Public Awareness Materials

Role Statement: The School Counselor

Frequently Asked Questions About Career Counseling

Professional Counselors as Providers of Mental Health Care

Scope of Practice for Rehabilitation Counseling
Celebrating Counseling Awareness Month

Celebrating Counseling Awareness All Year

Counseling is a profession with the potential to provide powerful preventative interventions for numerous populations and concerns. Counselors are specifically trained to identify and build upon strengths, conceptualize individuals in context, and be accessible to and serve as educators for their communities. Unfortunately, however, many people (including many potential clients) do not have a clear image of the unique strengths of counselors. Therefore, we need to do a better job of reaching out and letting people know who we are and what we can do.

This packet, Public Awareness Ideas and Strategies for Professional Counselors, is an excellent resource you can use to promote the profession of counseling. Whether you are a school counselor, community counselor, counselor educator, or advocate for counseling, you can use the information in this packet to celebrate counseling awareness all year. We provide specific suggestions for promotional ideas ranging from participating in professional organizations to delivering speeches and presentations.

To get you started, check out a few of these promotional ideas:

- Write a letter to the editor of your local paper. Address specific counseling related issues or simply let others know the important role counselors can plan in our schools and communities.

- Connect with government representatives. Write, phone, visit, or e-mail your local and state representatives. Explain to them the relevance of counseling for their constituents, and ask how you can collaborate with them to support the mental health needs of all people.

- Provide a brown-bag lunch seminar at your local library, factory, or business place. Make arrangements ahead of time to ensure access to the most people, and present a brief 45-minute presentation on a topic of your choice. Suggested presentation ideas include: managing stress; parenting skills; or dealing with depression.

- Develop a brochure or website that explains what professional counselors do. Consider including information on counselor training, credentials, code of ethics, and professional standards. Articulate the differences between counselors and other mental health professionals.

- Collaborate with other counselors to host a Community Connections party. Invite mental health professionals, school representatives, community members, and other interested folks to join together for an informal opportunity to network and share information regarding your community’s mental health needs. Public schools, community colleges, and civic organizations are usually willing to host such events, and businesses will occasionally donate food.
• Request professional counselor license plates be designed by professional counselors in your state to promote professional counseling. Or, create your own vanity plate for your car, such as iCOUNSEL. (Thanks to the Illinois School Counselor Association and Stuart Chen-Hayes for these ideas!)

• Wear your t-shirts, sweat shirt, and caps that bear the ACA logo. Have ACA membership applications and ACA publications available in your office. Inform other counselors about the benefits of membership at national, state, and local levels.

• Volunteer to assist with school and community service projects. Consider offering pro bono services.

• Look around your town and see who would benefit from professional counseling services. Are there people around you who are under- or ill-served by existing community resources? Stretch your advocacy skills by speaking out and working to ensure that the mental health needs of all people are met.

The members of the Public Awareness and Support Committee invite you to use your counseling skills to communicate your competency, share your expertise, and offer your assistance to your communities. Please feel free to contact any of us if we can assist you in your efforts to promote professional counseling. You are also invited to let us know if you have any tried and true methods for promoting professional counseling! To share your ideas, please contact Jan Bartlett at jbartlett@iastate.edu, or Janice Macdonald, at jmacdonald@counseling.org.
Promoting Public Awareness In April and Throughout The Year

It’s not difficult to sell professional counselors on the importance of public awareness to their daily work and the future of the profession.

Too many people do not know who we are, the extent of our training, and how we help individuals throughout the lifespan lead healthier, happier, and more productive lives. Too often, we feel “invisible.”

That “invisibility,” that public ignorance, is frustrating and it hurts us personally and professionally. We sometimes lose jobs to others who are less experienced and less well-trained, School and college administrators overburden us with administrative work, leaving little time to work directly with students.

We are sometimes denied insurance reimbursement and access to managed care panels. Policy-makers and administrators think career and employment counseling can be provided by computer terminals in shopping malls.

Funding for counseling services in schools, community and public agencies is frozen or reduced. The list goes on and on.

But for the individuals we are committed to serving, the consequences of this lack of public awareness of the profession are more often tragic than they are frustrating.

How many students drop out or perform poorly in school or college because the institution did not invest adequately in counseling services?

How many ended marriages and relationships could have been preserved had the partners worked with a professional counselor?

How many men and women went for weeks and months without a job because they did not have access to the assistance of career, employment and rehabilitation counselors?

How many people could have led happier, more fulfilling lives had they worked with a professional counselor?

The “invisibility” of professional counseling is not just a problem for us; it is problem for all of the men, women, and young people that we have committed ourselves to serving.

A Role for Each of Us

There are many important ways that each of us can contribute to enhancing public awareness of the profession, whatever our talents and interests, and whatever the constraints on our time.

This guide highlights a range of different ideas and strategies that can be utilized to promote greater public awareness of you and your profession in April and throughout the year.

Some of them are simple and can be carried out in a brief amount of time. Others require a more significant time commitment. All of them, however, will contribute to enhanced public awareness. Don’t assume that the only activity that “counts” is something that requires weeks of planning to implement. Everything counts.

Indeed, if each one of the more than 46,000 members of the American Counseling Association carried out just one public awareness activity in April, can you imagine the result? What a powerful impact we would make!
The Importance Of Defining Clear Objectives

You’re ready, you’re eager, you’ve made time in your schedule to take on a public awareness project. Where do you begin?

Begin with some careful thought and reflection. The most successful public awareness initiatives have clearly defined, narrow objectives. They target a particular audience with a specific message. They should also involve activities that you enjoy; feel comfortable with, and have time to do.

For these reasons, before embarking on a public awareness effort, we encourage you first to take some time to:

• Define some clear objectives for your efforts, including the target audience(s) that you want to reach;

• Identify some possible messages and themes that will be compelling to your audience(s);

• Inventory the resources, skills, and interests that you can utilize in your efforts.

Thinking about the following questions may be helpful to you in setting your objectives and identifying some possible activities that you want to pursue.

-- Your Audience --

Who are the key decision-makers who influence the delivery and availability of counseling services in your school, institution, or community? Whose decisions directly affect your ability to practice as a professional counselor?

This list could include agency administrators, principals, school board members, parents, students, consumers, healthcare executives, employers, benefit managers, and many more.

How do these decision-makers perceive professional counselors and counseling services?

What issues are important to these decision-makers? What objectives drive their decision-making?

A school principal, for example, may be concerned about school safety and student achievement. A company benefits manager may be concerned about health care costs, employee satisfaction, and on-the-job performance. Consumers want to lead happy, satisfying and productive lives.

How can the work of professional counselors facilitate the achievement of these objectives?

What groups and individuals in the community influence the views of these decision-makers? Who do they respect?

-- Skills and Resources --

What resources do you have that can assist you in carrying out public awareness activities?

This could include, for example, membership and participation in community and civic organizations or personal relationships with elected officials, reporters, or business executives.

What special skills and interests do you have that can be used?

Are you a skilled writer or public speaker, for example? Are you a great organizer?
What do you like to do?
How much time can you contribute?

Are there other professional counselors in your school, institution, or community who may also be interested in working on public awareness activities with you?

-- The Environment --

What issues are an ongoing, important concern to members of your school, institution or community? Are there particular issues that come up over and over in your local newspaper?

These might include, for example, recovery and rebuilding from a flood or major disaster, ongoing problems associated with over-development, economic change, substance abuse, school overcrowding, crime and violence, and many more.

How can the skills and expertise of professional counselors be used to address these issues?

Thinking about these questions will help you identify some clear public awareness objectives and determine the kinds of strategies and activities that you can and want to pursue.

And remember: an effective public awareness initiative does not require a massive, year-long campaign. Target your efforts. Do what you can do, even if it may only be one, limited activity. Do what you enjoy doing. Make public awareness activities fun for yourself, not a chore.

---

professional involvement

Participating In Professional Organizations

There is one very simple public awareness tool that you are already using: participating in a professional organization.

Membership in a national or branch association communicates to the public that you are part of a dynamic, emerging profession that is dedicated to improving the well-being of people throughout the life-span; that you adhere to a rigorous code of ethics in your work; and that you are committed to continually enhancing your skills and knowledge as a professional counselor. It’s a powerful statement—don’t hesitate to make it.

List your membership affiliations on your professional disclosure statement or other materials that you use in presenting yourself to the public.

Proclaim loudly and proudly your professional identity. Share articles from Counseling Today or journals with colleagues or others who may be interested in them.

If you make a presentation at an association conference, send out a brief press release to opinion-makers to let them know about it: the local or school newspaper, school board members, the school newspaper, etc.

If an article you’ve written is published in a journal or other counseling publication, share copies of your work with opinion-makers.

You’ve earned recognition from your peers for your work. Why not let others outside the profession know about it?

Be proud of the commitment you have made to professional excellence by joining and participating in the American Counseling Association.
Group Participation In Civic And Charitable Activities

Many of us participate in community and religious organizations and donate time or money to causes and charities that we believe in. We don’t do it for public recognition. We do it because it’s fulfilling, rewarding, and often, a lot of fun.

But participating in community service and charitable activities can also be a great way to enhance public awareness of the counseling profession—while at the same time helping others and improving the well-being of the community.

A great way to commemorate Counseling Awareness Month, National School Counseling Week, National Mental Health Counselors Week, National Career Development Month and other special events is to organize a group of professional counselors to volunteer time or make a financial contribution to a local charity or civic organization. Your group could be members of your branch or chapter, other professional counselors working in your school district, agency or institution, or simply a group of your friends and colleagues.

The possible activities you might pursue together as a group are literally endless, but the following are some ideas that you might consider:

+ Sponsor an “adopt a grandparent day” at a local nursing home or adult day care facility.

+ Sponsor or participate in a run or walk to raise funds for a local or national charity or service organization, such as the “Race for a Cure” for breast cancer. Sponsor an educational booth on the site of the event and distribute information on counseling and the services of professional counselors that are relevant to the focus of the event.

+ Sponsor a baking or cooking competition with a minimum entry fee that will be donated to a local charity.

+ Donate educational videos on issues of concern to the counseling profession to your local video chain for free use by the public. Most chains maintain a section of educational videos that are available for rental free of charge. Enhance their collections with educational videos on parenting skills, career development, child development, substance abuse, relationship issues, mental health, aging, or other issues that you consider important. Include the name of your group on the video case. If appropriate, also include a “for more information” phone number that renters can call. This could be the phone number of your branch, chapter, or agency, or the number of a community resource and referral agency. Be sure to promote your donation with a news release to the local media, as well as with flyers that can be distributed in the store.

+ Help out a local soup kitchen or assist with a food drive.

+ Organize a blood drive with the local chapter of the Red Cross.

+ Make a donation to your local public radio station in celebration of Counseling Awareness Month.

+ Donate books and educational videos on issues of concern to the counseling profession to your local library. Working together as a group, assess the quality and breadth of the library’s collection on career development, parenting, mental health and other issues. Are there resources missing that you and your group recommend? Meet with the chief librarian or head of acquisitions to discuss making your donation. Ask that each resource donated include the name of your group. Publicize the donation with news releases to the local media.

+ Organize a clothing drive for a domestic violence or homeless shelter to collect professional clothing that can be worn by residents on job interviews.

+ Answer phones as a group during a public television or radio fundraising drive and request that your group’s participation be noted on the air.

+ Sponsor a “thank you” breakfast or other event to honor individuals who contribute to the well-being of your school, agency, or community. Honorees might include persons who volunteer at your school or in the community, athletic coaches, leaders of youth programs, clergy, law enforcement officials, and others.

Cut back on what you would have spent for a holiday party or other group celebration and donate the money you saved to charity.

If you do carry out a group volunteer or service activity publicize your project with a news release to the local media, either before or after the event, as appropriate. See page 22 of this guide for more information about how to prepare and distribute a release.

Participating In National Screening Day Initiatives

Coalitions of mental health professionals and advocates currently sponsor five different nationwide screening initiatives designed to assist concerned members of the public in finding out if they are suffering from a substance abuse or mental disorder and could benefit from mental health treatment. On designated screening days, mental health professionals around the nation sponsor screening sites and volunteer their time to interview, assess, and provide information to members of the public about treatment options.

Participating in these initiatives, either as a site sponsor or as a volunteer, is another important way that professional counselors can expand awareness of their role as providers of mental health care—while at the same time addressing unmet mental health needs in their communities.

In general, screening sites should be facilities that can accommodate large numbers of people and are accessible to the community, such as community mental health centers, senior citizen or childcare centers, hospitals, and college counseling centers. Private practitioners can also team up with local chapters of the National Mental Health Association or other community groups to sponsor a site at community facilities such as public libraries, YMCAs, and local government buildings.

A registration fee is charged for each screening site. Sponsors receive procedure manuals and all materials needed to conduct the screenings, as well as assistance in publicizing the availability of the screening to members of their community.

The following screening events will be held over the next year:

National Depression Screening Day -- October 11,

The focus of National Depression Screening Day is to call attention to the illness of depression on a national level, to educate the public about its symptoms and effective treatments, to offer individuals the opportunity to be screened for depression, and to connect those in need of treatment to the mental health care system. The fee for registering as a screening site is $125. The deadline for registration is August 1.
For more information, contact:

National Mental Illness Screening Project
One Washington Street - Suite 304
Wellesley Hills, MA 02181-1706
(781) 239-0071

National Eating Disorders Screening Program -- February 2004

The National Eating Disorders Screening Program (NEDSP) is implemented during Eating Disorders Awareness Week and was held for the first time on more than 600 college campuses in 1996.

NEDSP includes an educational presentation on eating disorders and/or related topics (body image, nutrition, etc.), a written screening test, and the opportunity to meet one-on-one with a mental health professional. It also provides individuals with information about how to help friends or family members who may be suffering from an eating disorder.

National Eating Disorders Screening Program is set on a bi-annual basis. The next NEDSP will be in 2004. For more information, contact:

Screening for Mental Health, Inc.
One Washington Street - Suite 304
Wellesley Hills, MA 02181-1706
(781) 239-0071

National Alcohol Screening Day – April 11, 2004

National Alcohol Screening Day is designed to call attention to alcohol problems on a national level, to educate the public about symptoms of, and effective treatments for, alcohol problems, and to connect those in need with available treatments.

For more information, contact:

Screening for Mental Health, Inc.
One Washington Street - Suite 304
Wellesley Hills, MA 02181
(781) 239-0071

National Anxiety Disorders Screening Day -- May 1, 2004

National Anxiety Disorders Screening Day, founded in 1993 and held each May during Mental Health Month, educates the public about anxiety disorders, their symptoms and treatment options. Free anonymous screenings for five anxiety disorders are offered at screening sites throughout the nation.

Registered sites receive screening forms, pamphlets, posters, a video, information on anxiety disorders and available treatments, organizing guidelines, and a step-by-step manual with instructions for conducting screenings. The registration fee for screening sites is $100. The deadline for registering is in March of 2004. For information, contact:

Freedom from Fear
308 Seaview Avenue
Staten Island, NY 10305
(718) 351-1717
Delivering Speeches And Presentations

Delivering speeches and presentations before community and professional groups, in workplaces, at public libraries, and other forums and settings is a powerful way to increase public awareness and recognition of your expertise as a professional counselor. It can also be effective in establishing positive, collaborative relationships with important leaders in the community, as well as in developing new sources for referrals.

But I Hate Public Speaking!

You’re not alone. In national opinion surveys, public speaking frequently ranks high on lists of people’s greatest fears—sometimes ranked higher than illness and death! Though they have superior training in communication and listening skills, many professional counselors are reluctant to speak before groups. That’s okay. It’s not for everyone, and even some of those who excel at public speaking don’t consider it one of their most pleasurable pursuits.

But before you dismiss the idea altogether, we hope that you will first think more carefully about it and the reasons for your reluctance.

Is it because you think you must be a polished, silver-tongued orator? That isn’t what it takes to be an effective speaker. In his book, How to Speak Like a Pro (1983), Leon Fletcher, an accomplished educator in the art of public speaking, argues that:

> Today most effective speakers talk in conversational tones. They are informal. Personable. Today, most good speakers talk with -- not at -- their listeners...Be yourself and you are more likely to get your ideas across, deliver information, stimulate action.

You don’t need to be a “toastmaster,” an actor or performer to deliver an effective presentation. You need to be yourself.

Are you reluctant to speak because you don’t think you have anything to say that others will be interested in hearing? Forget that. As a professional counselor, you possess an enormous body of knowledge that most people are eager to tap. How many of your friends and acquaintances gently (or not so gently) prod you for your insights into issues in their lives? So long as you tailor your presentation to the interests of your audience, you don’t need to worry about their lack of interest in what you have to say.

Still reluctant to speak before a group? How about teaming up with another professional counselor to make the presentation? Using a team approach often relieves a lot of the anxiety that many of us feel about public speaking.

What Do I Talk About?

The topic of your presentation should be based first and most importantly, on your interests and areas of expertise. If you’re not interested in the topic or feel uncomfortable addressing it, your presentation is going to be unpleasant for you, and possibly for your audience as well. What are you interested in speaking about? What expertise do you have that would benefit others if you shared it with them?

Keying into the needs and interests of your audience is also important. In general, audiences tend to be most interested in presentations that:

- Teach new skills
- Help solve problems
- Offer new perspectives on issues
- Enhance the quality of their lives
- Relate to topics and issues that directly concern them
- Do not appear overly self-promotional
In other words, in thinking about possible presentations that you could make, assume the perspective of your intended audience. What knowledge do you have that applies to their particular concerns? How can you share your knowledge in a brief presentation so that it will be meaningful and useful to them? How can you promote learning, thoughtful reflection, and application of your knowledge by the audience?

Much of this should sound familiar to you. In many ways, public speaking is simply an extension and application of the skills you already use in individual or group counseling, but in a different setting.

Avoiding excessive self-promotion in any form is also important. Let’s face it—would you want to sit through a lecture by a Certified Public Accountant about why he or she should do your taxes instead of H &R Block? Probably not. Remember, you are already delivering a powerful message about your skills and expertise, as well as those of other professional counselors, simply by making an effective, informative presentation.

That doesn’t mean you shouldn’t include information about the training, education and qualifications of professional counselors, or the value of school counseling programs, or similar issues in your presentation. You should.

But whenever possible, put the focus of your presentation on demonstrating your expertise in a way that connects to your audience, rather than simply stating it as a given. Depending upon your audience and your interests and expertise, possible topics for presentations could include:

- Career development and advancement
- Parenting and parent-child communication
- Enhancing the quality of relationships
- Managing stress
- Dealing with difficult people
- Coping with physical illness and disability
- Depression and the “blues”
- Breaking bad habits
- Loneliness
- Assertiveness skills
- Improving self-image and self-esteem
- Balancing work and family
- Teaching children self-discipline
- Adapting to adult life transitions
- Helping young people plan for postsecondary education and employment.

Also keep an eye on news stories, the best-seller lists, and other indicators of what is currently of interest to the general public. They can often give you other useful ideas for “hot topics” that would be of interest to an audience.

But Where Do I Speak?

There are many possibilities for delivering speeches and presentations in your community. Some of the options—from community meetings to adult education classes—are outlined below.

Speaking At Meetings of Community Organizations

Dozens of organizations that meet throughout the year in your community welcome presentations by guest speakers, including:

- Parent associations;

- Chapters of the Kiwanis, NAACP Urban League, LULAC, Rotary, Lions, Junior League, and other service and social organizations;

- Organizations of other professionals, such as physicians, lawyers, teachers, sales and marketing executives, small-business owners, and Women in Business chapters;

- Civic and political organizations, both non-partisan and partisan, such as chapters of the League of Women Voters, Young Democrats and Young Republicans;
For more ideas about possible organizations at which you could present, check out the events section of your local newspaper. Most local Chambers of Commerce also maintain a list of local business and professional organizations.

Getting Started

Identify several organizations that sound like promising prospects based on your interests and expertise, as well as the public awareness objectives that you have established for yourself.

Do some background research about these organizations, including the focus of the organization, who their members are and what their interests are, how often they meet, their meeting format, and topics of past presentations. You may have friends or colleagues who are members of the organizations. Chamber of Commerce publications, public libraries, and newspaper listings are also good sources of information. Or, if appropriate, attend one of the meetings yourself.

For each organization, identify a list of possible topics that might interest the members of the organization and upon which you have expertise.

Contact the president or program chair of the organization to express your interest in speaking, presenting the list of possible topics you have identified, why you think they might interest the organization’s members, and some background about your expertise on the issue. In some cases, this can be done with a phone call. In most cases, however, it’s probably best to write a brief letter.

Sponsoring Workshops for Groups Of Professionals

Another, more ambitious approach is to sponsor a workshop for groups of professionals in the community who may not be part of an existing network or organization that meets on a regular basis. The expertise of professional counselors would be of great interest to man’s groups of professionals, particularly those who work directly with the public on an extended basis. These include, for example:

- Attorneys
- Members of the clergy
- Physicians
- Nurses and other health care professionals
- Law enforcement officers
- Court employees

A wide range of topics may be of interest to these groups of professional, such as presentations on:

- Effective communication and interpersonal skills, particularly when dealing with individuals who are angry, distressed or mentally ill
- Grief and bereavement
- Marriage, family, and relationship issues
- Child and adolescent development
- Aging and adult development
- Addiction
- Identifying depression
- Mental illness and treatment
- Stress management and job burnout
- Substance use and abuse

In many cases, these professionals also may have expertise that would be of interest to you as well. In these cases, workshops can also be structured to incorporate dialogue and information-sharing.
Getting Started

Since planning and carrying out a workshop of this kind is time-consuming, you may want to consider teaming up with one or more other professional counselors to divide the labor involved.

You can develop a mailing list of professionals who may be invited to the presentation by consulting the Yellow Pages, local professional societies, and the local Chamber of Commerce.

Presentations for health care professionals may also be arranged by collaborating with a hospital or other health care facility or by consulting with the local union that represents nurses and other health care employees.

Presentations for law enforcement officers might be arranged by contacting an administrator at your local law enforcement agency or by speaking with the head of the local union that represents law enforcement employees.

Partnering with Public Libraries

Many public library branches sponsor or host presentations by speakers as part of their general mission to address the information needs of the community. Their other objectives in hosting presentations may include:

- increasing public use of the library by attracting members of the public who might not otherwise visit the library, or
- enhancing or highlighting particular library services or resources.

For example, presentations might be made to parents while children participate in “story hours” or other reading programs, or a workshop on career development might be presented that includes information about the resources available through the library.

Information may be available through newspaper listings, flyers or newsletters produced by the library, or simply by speaking with a desk attendant or librarian at your branch.

It’s important that you have some basic knowledge of the library’s past activities before you approach library administrators about making a presentation. It demonstrates that you have an interest in the library and its goals, a key ingredient in building a successful partnership. It may also give you some ideas about the outreach priorities of your branch, opportunities for presentations, and possible topics that you might present on.

If your library does not appear to have sponsored any presentations by outside speakers, don’t assume that it’s because they’re not interested. In all likelihood, it’s because no one approached them and offered to do it.

Drawing on your research, identify some possible topics for presentations that might be made at your local library that would contribute to the library’s mission and priorities—and also address your own public awareness goals.

Make an appointment with the appropriate library administrator to present your ideas and discuss how you might collaborate in the future.
Delivering Workplace Presentations

Many larger employers host regular “brown bag lunch” presentations from outside speakers for employees during the mid-day hours. Presentations of this kind provide an excellent opportunity to both increase public awareness of yourself and your profession and to build positive relationships with employers. These relationships may be helpful to you in the future in influencing the employer’s health care purchasing decisions, including mental health coverage and the inclusion of professional counselors as reimbursable providers. For school counselors, workplace presentations provide opportunities to strengthen business support for and involvement in school guidance and counseling programs.

Workplace presentations typically focus on issues that directly relate to employee productivity and effectiveness, such as:

- managing job stress
- developing teamwork and supervisory skills
- dealing with difficult people
- balancing the demands of work and family
- substance abuse in the workplace

Other issues that impact productivity and job satisfaction more indirectly may also be appropriate topics, such as:

- caring for an older parent
- marriage and other relationship issues
- parenting skills
- grief and bereavement
- dealing with life transitions
- depression

Workplace presentations may be coordinated by the human resources director, the employee benefits manager, or employee assistance program, depending upon the business.

Getting Started

Develop a list of possible topics for workplace presentations that you feel comfortable addressing and that may interest local employers.

Identify employers with 25 or more employees in your community by consulting your local Chamber of Commerce. Identify the appropriate employee who is responsible for organizing outside presentations. When in doubt, start with the director of human resources.

Contact each individual with a brief letter that expresses your interest in making a presentation, outlines some possible topics, and describes your education, training and other qualifications. You may also want to include an updated curriculum vita or resume.

Follow-up a week or two later with a phone call.

Teaching an Adult Education Class

Another powerful way to expand public awareness of yourself and the profession is by teaching a short-term adult or continuing education class at a local college, university or private institution such as the Learning Annex. Depending upon the size of your community dozens to hundreds of continuing education courses are offered to the public every year. More often than not, the instructors are not full-time speakers or presenters, but people just like you — individuals with other full-time jobs who have some specialized knowledge and expertise that can enhance peoples’ lives. Teaching an adult education class immediately boosts your visibility and credibility as an expert in the community. Though only 10-15 people may actually enroll in your course, hundreds to thousands of people will read your name and a description of your area(s) of expertise in the course bulletins and flyers that are circulated widely throughout the community. As an added bonus, you will be paid for teaching the course.
Most courses are typically offered over 3-5 sessions, but one-time sessions are also offered. Participants frequently include single men and women of all ages interested in meeting new people, retirees, individuals interested in advancing their careers, as well as individuals committed to improving themselves through the acquisition of new knowledge and skills.

In thinking about possible presentations that you might make, consider the needs and interests of these audiences. Also think about specific “niches” within these audiences, particularly individuals who are making important transitions in their lives, such as women or men reentering the workforce after several years of full-time caregiving at home, newly-divorced or separated individuals, career-changers, new step-parents, new retirees, or parents whose children are entering adolescence.

What areas of expertise do you have that would be meaningful to these and other groups?

Payment schedules vary considerably from institution to institution and depend as well upon your previous experience and perceived name value” as a course instructor. They include:

- A flat payment
- A flat payment up to a certain number of enrolled students, with an additional per capita payment for each enrolled student above that amount
- A per capita payment for each student
- A percentage, generally 10-15%, of the tuition fees paid by students enrolling in your course, with higher percentages for instructors with greater experience.

Getting Started

Identify colleges, universities, and other institutions that offer adult or continuing education classes in your community by looking in the Yellow Pages under “Schools.” Course bulletins are also frequently distributed at stores and other businesses and in free newspaper display boxes on the street. You can also contact the Clearinghouse of the Association of Adult Education Centers for a list of their members at 1554 Hayes Drive, Manhattan, KS 665202 or by calling (913) 539-LERN.

To get a better sense of the scope of each institution’s market, areas of interest, and course format, review past course offerings.

Develop a list of possible topics that you would be interested in presenting on, with a brief description of the material that would be covered and the target audience. Update your curriculum vitae or resume, taking care to highlight education, training, and other experiences that demonstrate your expertise on the topics upon which you are interested in presenting.

Contact the institution to make an appointment to speak with the employee responsible for deciding on course offerings. You may also make your first contact by mail, and follow-up with an appointment.

Don’t Forget Handouts!

In whatever forum you make a presentation, be sure to incorporate handouts in your presentation. Handouts not only reinforce the message you are delivering and improve comprehension of your key points, they give your audience something to take home to which they can refer back, or that they can pass on to someone else who may interested in the subject.

In designing your handouts, remember to include information about yourself and your expertise, Information about the counseling profession generally if appropriate, and how you can be contacted for additional information. If you are available for individual or group consultations or counseling, or to make similar presentations before other groups, say so clearly on your handout.
Tips for Making an Effective Presentation

Whether you realize it or not, you already do have all the skills you need to deliver an effective speech or presentation. But we have assembled some suggestions on effective speaking from a variety of sources that may be useful to you as you prepare for your presentation.

Preparing for Your Audience

First, it’s important to gather some basic information that you will want to consider in your planning and preparation, including:

• The audience’s prior base of knowledge on the subject, as well their attitudes toward it;

• The room set-up, size of the audience, whether you will be using a microphone, and whether your audiovisual needs can be accommodated;

• The point in the program that you will be speaking, and what will immediately precede and follow your presentation.

Preparing Your Remarks

Unless absolutely necessary, don’t plan on delivering a scripted speech. Writing out a speech word-for-word is not only very time-consuming, it often produces something that you’ll find awkward and difficult to deliver.

Our writing styles tend to be more formal than our speaking styles, using longer and more complex sentence structures and often drawing on unfamiliar words that you will want to avoid in a speech.

A better bet is a clear and concise outline of the points you want to make in your presentation, jotted on notecards or sheets of paper.

Structuring Your Presentation

In How to Speak Like a Pro, Leon Fletcher recommends the following outline for an effective presentation:

Introduction (15% of program)

Attention-Getter: Fletcher suggests keeping greetings to a minimum, focusing your opening words on getting your audience to direct its attention to the subject. Attention-getters include:

• Stating a startling fact
• Asking a question
• Presenting a quotation
• Pointing to a historic event
• Emphasizing the importance of the subject

Preview: Once you have the attention of the audience, present a clear statement of the purpose of your speech and its central ideas in no more than two sentences.

Discussion (75% of program)

Set out no more than 5 key points or issues. “Many listeners,” Fletcher advises, “are not able to remember more than five points”.

Support each point with specifics. Use examples from your own and others’ personal experience, statistics, quotations, and other data to both support your point and expand on its meaning. Use a mix of different types of information. Don’t rely solely on statistics—personal experiences are also powerful.

Conclusion (10% of program)

Announce the conclusion. Let your audience know that you are wrapping up—this will focus their attention. Then summarize or repeat the main points of your presentation.

Present a “memorable statement.” This could be one of the “attention-getters” suggested above, or could be a statement that prompts or suggests appropriate action in response to the presentation.
Working With The Media

Print and electronic media is one of the most powerful influences on our behavior, attitudes, thoughts, and perceptions. Media coverage of an issue immediately makes it important and relevant. How media presents an issue shapes our perception and attitudes towards it.

Perhaps because it is so pervasive and influential in our culture, the media is often perceived as some mysterious force that independently searches out and finds the news that it reports. But that’s just not true.

While most reporters do seek out some stories on their own, a large proportion of the news you see, read, and hear was brought to their attention by a news release, a phone call, or by other means. The editor of the Wall Street Journal estimates that 90% of the articles it prints are generated by news releases or telephone tips. Reporters often don’t have the time or resources to go out and find the news. More often than not, media professionals find the news from their desks, sorting through press releases and telephone messages to discover issues that merit further attention and investigation.

In short, you can win media attention for yourself or a program, project, or activity that you are involved with — and you don’t need a publicist or a PR professional to succeed.

What you do need to succeed is:

• self-confidence and a belief in the value and importance of the information you are sharing with the media;
• a modest commitment of time and energy;
• an understanding of the needs of media professionals and how to frame and “pitch” your story ideas so that they are compelling to them;
• knowledge of the basic tools and conventions of media relations.

As renowned public relations executive Michael Levine puts it in his book Guerilla P.R. (1997), “this isn’t brain surgery.” It’s something all of us can do. So let’s get started!

Understanding Media Professionals

To work successfully with journalists and other media professionals, it’s important to better understand what makes them “tick” — the nature and demands of their work, as well as some common personality characteristics.

In our experience, we’ve found that media professionals:

* Tend to be curious and interested in people and ideas. The more you can connect personally with a journalist and engage this curiosity, the more likely you are to win the kind of coverage you are seeking.

* Prefer talking with “real people” rather than publicists-for-hire. If you think you’re at a disadvantage in working with the media because you haven’t received extensive public relations training and aren’t a pro, think again. Journalists tend to view public relations professionals with disdain and suspicion. Your inexperience is actually an asset.

* Work in a stressful and frustrating environment. Deadlines loom continually over the heads of everyone who works in the media.
There’s little time to do all of the background research that may be appropriate for a story. Everything must be done quickly. This means that you will be far more likely to achieve the media coverage you are seeking if you do as much of the legwork and background research needed for a story as possible. Anticipate journalists’ needs. Make it as easy as possible for them to write the story you are seeking.

Demand absolute honesty. Reporting an error or misstatement of fact can jeopardize a journalist’s job. In all of your dealings with media professionals, it is essential that you always be up-front and honest. Never stretch the truth. And never guess at an answer. If you don’t know something, say so, and volunteer to try to find the information if you can. Once you’ve lost your credibility with a journalist, you’ve lost all hope of winning the kind of coverage that you are seeking.

Are typically generalists. The nature of their jobs requires media professionals to know a little about a lot. Even health, education, and other “beat” reporters have such a wide scope of responsibilities that it is difficult for them to develop in-depth, specialized knowledge of any one subject. For this reason, to the extent possible, it’s important to present your story in a way that does not require any previous and in-depth knowledge in order to fully comprehend it. You shouldn’t be condescending or patronizing, of course, but assume that the media professional you are working with has a limited base of knowledge from which to evaluate the importance of the information you are sharing.

Seek stories and issues that will excite, interest, and appeal to their readers. Nearly all media outlets are profit-making entities. They must maintain and build ratings or subscription, newsstand, and advertising sales in order to survive. The news that they report must be something that appeals to their audience in some way. Keep this uppermost in your mind as you seek to interest media professionals in your story. You don’t have to (and shouldn’t) sink to sensationalism. But you should try to assume the perspective of media professionals in presenting your story to them. What makes it distinctive or unique? Why is it important that the public know about it? How will it enhance their lives if they know about it?

Thrive on attention and recognition. If the media professional you are working with has written or broadcast something that you enjoyed or found useful and informative, don’t hesitate to say so. But don’t invent compliments. Most media professionals will instantly pick up on flattery that sounds insincere and will feel, as they should, insulted and resentful. So if you don’t have anything nice to say… well, you know the rest.

Have short-attention spans. Deadline pressure requires it. Whether you connect with a media professional through a news release, phone call, or letter, understand that they will necessarily give you only a brief amount of time to make an impression. Use this time wisely. Condense and simplify your message to the most important and impressive points you want to make. ACA Past-President Gail Robinson often noted that one of the most important lessons she learned in lobbying elected officials is that your message must be concise enough to be delivered during an elevator ride. The same rule applies to communicating with media professionals. Keep it simple and short.

- Are people, too. Keeping it simple doesn’t mean being brusque, officious, and impersonal. Don’t be afraid to connect with media professionals on a personal level when you are seeking their attention. It’ll make the encounter far less stressful for you.
Targeting Your Media Efforts

Since media outreach can be very time-consuming, it’s important that you begin by defining some narrow, targeted objectives for your efforts. Otherwise, it’s easy to quickly become overwhelmed and burnt-out. Start small and build from there.

Starting small is also the only way that the full story of the counseling profession will be told in the media. Of course, you want everyone to know everything there is to know about professional counselors. But that’s a long-term goal that is achieved through a series of different media pieces that focus on various aspects of the profession and what it offers to the public. There won’t be any single story that tells it all.

When was the last time you saw an article or a TV news story that told you everything there is to know about, say, optometry, or any other profession? And if you came across such an article or TV news story, odds are that you would have turned the page or switched to another channel — or simply dozed off.

Telling the whole story of the counseling profession requires telling multiple, different stories that appeal to narrow segments of the public over time. Focus your efforts on telling 1 or maybe 2 of those stories in your community each year. If you’re particularly ambitious, tell 3 or 4. But you cannot do it all, and you should not expect yourself to do it all. Start small.

To help you focus your efforts, start by asking yourself the following questions:

What narrow segments of the public are most important to you to reach with media coverage?

Is it parents? School board members, legislators, and other policy-makers? Students at a college or university? Business leaders who make decisions about health insurance policies? Potential consumers of counseling services?

Break down your targeted audience to as narrow and specific a segment as possible, based on geographic, demographic, or other characteristics.

For example, if you want to highlight the benefits of career or employment counseling hanno in in one or two groups out of the whole universe of possible consumers of those services, such as caregivers re-entering the workforce, or men and women considering mid-life career changes.

The narrower your audience, the more manageable and successful your media outreach will be.

What message are you seeking to deliver to our targeted audience(s)?

That public investment in school counseling programs is worthwhile? That consumers can benefit from consulting a professional counselor?

Here again, try to develop as narrow and specific a message as possible. Once you have a basic message, break it down even further, posing “fill in the blanks” type questions to yourself, such as:

Investment in school counseling programs is worthwhile because school counseling ________________________________

Couples with relationship problems should consult a professional counselor because ________________________________

How can your message be demonstrated or illustrated in ways that would interest or engage media professionals?

Remember, media professionals are interested in what interests their audience. “News is something unique or distinctive that inform readers, listeners, or viewers about issues they care about.”
This might include seeking media coverage of any public outreach activities you undertake such as public presentations, group participation in charitable or civic events, and so forth.

Or it might include suggesting stories to the media, such as:

- Truancy and dropout problems in the school district and how school counselors are addressing them;
- The challenges two-career couples face in maintaining healthy and satisfying relationships, with some ideas on how couples can prevent these challenges from hurting their relationships, as well as how to tell when seeing a professional counselor may be appropriate;
- How new technology is vastly expanding opportunities for people with severe disabilities to live and work independently, and the critical role that rehabilitation counselors play in helping them to take advantage of those opportunities;
- The challenges of changing careers in midlife, with some basic “how to get started” suggestions, as well as information about how a career or employment counselor may help.

Thinking about these questions may take a little time, but will save you more time later and will make media outreach more manageable. Your answers to questions like these should give you clearer, more specific ideas about the focus of your media outreach, the media outlets you will target, and the tools you will use to reach them.

Building A Media List

Developing a thorough, targeted media list is essential to successful media outreach. To get the attention of a media professional, you first have to make sure that he or she actually receives the information you want to share.

Start by compiling a list of all of the media outlets in your community. Many of these will be easy to identify because you read, listen to, or watch them yourself. To ensure that your list is comprehensive, consult your local reference librarian. Most main branches have a copy of reference hooks such as Editor and Publisher International Yearbook that list newspapers, radio programs, and television news organizations by geographical area. Your library may also maintain its own list of other local publications that may not be included in these references, such as newsletters of community organizations.

Let the librarian know what you’re looking for and what you’re trying to do—he or she may have many resources that will be helpful to you.

To keep the project manageable, maintain your media outreach objectives uppermost in your mind. Don’t collect information about a media outlet if you can’t identify a use for the information. You can always go back and expand your list later.

Once you have a basic list to work from, gather additional information about each media outlet, including address, telephone and fax numbers; frequency of publication airing; deadlines (including deadlines for submission of calendar items); and special audience characteristics.

You should also identify key personnel at each outlet. Don’t settle for one contact per outlet. The law of averages is against you. The more contacts you have, the more likely you are to gain the coverage you are seeking.

Depending upon their content, news releases, for example, could be sent to 3 or 4 different persons at a single outlet, including the editor, the calendar editor, the education reporter, and the lifestyle editor. In media outreach, the more, the merrier.

Media contacts that you may want to identify at each outlet could include:

---For Newspapers---
- Calendar editor
- Education reporter
- Health reporter
- Legislative/political reporter
- Features editor
- Lifestyle editor
- City editor
- Business editor
- Columnists

---For Television---
- Day, night, or weekend assignment editors
- Education reporter
- Health reporter
- Legislative/political reporter
- Public Affairs/Public Service Directors
- Talk show producers
- News anchors

---For Radio---
- News director
- Program director
- News reporters
- Public Affairs/Public Service Director
- Morning drive time disc jockey
- Afternoon drive time disc jockey
- Talk show producers

Gathering this information will typically require phone calls to each outlet. But you can acquire a great deal of it by reading, listening, and watching. This also gives you a better sense of the interests and focuses of different reporters and programs and how they may fit into your media outreach objectives.

Keep in mind, as well, that your media list is a perpetual “work in progress”. If you read a story by a reporter that relates to an issue that you are interested in, you should add their name to your list. Since turnover can be high at some media outlets, you should also plan to revise and update your list at least once a year.

Sending Out News Releases

Sending news releases to local media is a basic and cost-effective public awareness tool that you should use when you want to announce:

- Special events, including speaking engagements;
- A new service or program;
- A promotion, election to office in an organization, or receipt of awards or other honors.

When considering news releases for publication, editors expect them to meet 3 basic criteria: your news must be of local significance; it must be timely; and it must be accurate, truthful and complete.

The nature of your announcement also will determine to which editor you should send your news release. Review the primary newspapers, both daily and weekly, as well as any other local news and feature publications in your community for regular columns and departments, such as health, education, family living, religion, community calendar, special events, people, etc. to identify the appropriate individuals to whom you should direct your release.

If you are announcing an event send your release at least ten days in advance of the event to daily news outlets; for weekly outlets, send the release at least three weeks in advance.

When writing a news release, follow these guidelines:

--- Format ---
• Prepare the news release on the business letterhead of your organization, school or other institution, or private practice.

• Type your release double-spaced, with one-inch margins on all sides. Use only one side of the paper (yes, this is wasteful, but one-sided releases are what editors prefer).

• In the upper right-hand corner, type “FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE”. Include the date you are sending the release, either directly below “FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE” or at the end of the release.

• On the next line, type “CONTACT:” and include your name, address, and telephone numbers (day and evening when possible).

• Leave approximately ten spaces before you type and center the headline. This gives the editor ample space to write instructions or comments.

• Whenever possible, limit the length of the release to one page.

• If you need additional pages, type and center —MORE— at the bottom of the first page. On subsequent pages, retype part of the headline in the top left corner and identify page numbers in the top right corner, using this notation: ADD ONE, ADD TWO, etc.

• Do not carry over paragraphs from one page to the next. Also avoid splitting a sentence between two pages.

• If you use multiple pages, do not staple them together.

• Use bullet points whenever you can. Leave plenty of white space; this makes your release easier to read.

• To signify the end of the release, type and center three hash marks: ####.

--Content--

• In general, a news release should mimic a regular news story: written in the third person and setting out factual information in an objective way.

• Your headline should be no more than one clause that succinctly states the essence of the release and who it is about, such as “AREA SCHOOL COUNSELORS TO SPONSOR COMMUNITY AWARENESS EVENT”.

• The first paragraph (or lead) should be a concise statement of the most important facts: who, what, when, where and why. It should be one or two sentences at most.

• Insert additional details and supporting information in the succeeding paragraphs with the most important points mentioned first.

• Write the release so it may be cut at the end of any paragraph. Editors cut from the bottom to fit the space available.

• Keep your paragraphs short.

• While not required, incorporating quotes from yourself or others sometimes adds color to the release. They can also be used to emphasize the importance of the event or activity or to editorialize on the subject matter.

• Don’t assume that the editor has background knowledge needed to understand the context of the event/activity, and its importance. Include in the release all information that is needed by people from all educational levels and backgrounds to fully understand what you are announcing. And never use jargon.

--Style--

Press release writing has a style of its own. Two of the best reference books for style and form are The Associated Press Stylebook, and The Elements of Style, (William Strunk, Jr. and E.B. White).
Here are some highlights from these two texts:

- Write in a way that comes naturally. Do not use excessively flamboyant words. Write clearly and concisely.

- Write primarily with nouns and verbs. Persons, places and things in action bring writing to life. Adjectives and adverbs should be used sparingly and placed carefully. You’re writing editorial copy, not advertising copy.

- Do not overstate. Exaggeration puts the reader instantly on guard. Everything you write will be suspect because the reporter or editor has lost confidence in your judgment.

- Avoid the use of qualifiers. Rather, very, little, pretty — these are nuisance words that only clutter your story.

- Do not use unnecessary adverbs after a quote. The statement itself should disclose the speaker’s manner or condition without adverbs like “happily” or “enthusiastically” being added. The word “said” after a quote is sufficient.

- Beware of redundancies. Don’t say “10 a.m. this morning.”

- Do not use “th” or “st” following numbers. Use January 1, not January 1st.

- When in doubt, look it up. Your release will be received more positively if your grammar, spelling and style are correct.

- Revise and rewrite. Write it, read it, edit it.

Sample News Release

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

DATE:

CONTACT: Your name and phone number

AMERICAN COUNSELING ASSOCIATION MAKES CONTRIBUTION TO LOCAL CHARITY DURING ANNUAL CONVENTION

When the American Counseling Association World Conference brought 3,500 professional counselors to Anaheim, CA in March, they not only enjoyed the city -- they also sought to contribute to improving the well-being of the people of Anaheim.

The American Counseling Association Human Concerns Fund will make a donation to Children of the Night, a group devoted to rescuing child prostitutes, ages 11 – 17, from the streets. It has a shelter in Van Nuys where the youngsters live, receive counseling, go to school and even college.

Anaheim is known as the home of Disneyland, and is the 10th largest city in California. Thirty-six percent of the population is white, 46 percent has a Spanish-language surname, 12 percent are Asians, and almost 3 percent are African-American.

Children of the Night is a private, non-profit, tax-exempt organization founded in 1979, dedicated to assisting children between the ages of 11 and 17 who are forced to prostitute on the streets for food and a place to sleep. Since 1979 more than 10,000 girls and boys have been rescued from prostitution and the domination of vicious pimps. More than 80 percent of these children have remained off the streets. And this has been done with private donations. You can check their website: www.children of the night.org.

Founded in 1952, the American Counseling Association is the world’s largest non-profit organization for professional counselors. Dedicated to promoting public confidence and trust in the counseling profession, the American Counseling Association serves more than 55,000 members in the United States and 50 other countries.

Sending Photographs

Sending a photograph with your release can draw more attention to, and reinforce, the information you are sharing, but it’s neither always necessary nor always appropriate. Photographs can also be expensive. In general, consider including a photograph if:

- It dramatizes or illustrates the information you are presenting, OR
- You are seeking to build greater public recognition of your face as well as your name.

If you do decide to include photographs with your news release, follow these guidelines:

- Submit vertical or tightly cropped horizontal black and white photos, either 8" x 10" or 3" x 5" in size.
- Photographs must be taken with a 35mm camera. Polaroids and other more inexpensive cameras do not produce images suitable for reproduction.
- Editors prefer “action” photos. Avoid static head shots or posed pictures when you can. However, if you must pose your subjects, keep the background simple and have them do something... read a plaque, study a poster, etc. If the photo is of a group, try to limit the number of people to four.
- DO NOT staple or use a paper clip on the photo. They will leave marks on the photo.
- For the same reason, DO NOT write on the back of your photo. Instead, type a caption on a separate sheet of paper and tape it to the back of the photo. Write captions with the same care that you write a news release. Clearly identify everyone in the picture, from left to right, and be sure that you have permission to include them in the photograph.
- When submitting to more than one publication, take different photographs and vary your distribution.
- Be sure the photo is not too dark. Pictures always reproduce darker in print.

Using The Fax Machine

Unless you are announcing urgent breaking news, it’s best to avoid faxing a news release to media outlets. Faxes may not be read any faster or sooner than news releases sent by mail, and many editors and reporters find them annoying.

If you must send your release by fax, be sure the release is typed in black ink so that it will transmit clearly. And NEVER send a fax longer than four pages. Anything longer is likely to annoy the recipient.

Writing News Releases For Radio

News releases for radio must be short and concise. Your release should be structured as an announcement that can be read directly over the air in 10, 30, or 60 seconds.
Radio news producers and announcers generally will not edit a lengthy release that you have written for the print media to suit the radio format. That’s your job!
In general, a 10 second release is 15-25 words, a 30 second release is 60-70 words, and a 60 second release is 120-150 words.

Following Up By Telephone

Editors:

- Respect deadlines. Don’t call when it’s possible that the reporter or editor is under the crush of a deadline. Generally, it’s a good idea to call in the morning, when reporters and editors are less likely to be facing an imminent deadline.
- Try to speak directly with the reporter or editor to whom you sent the release whenever possible. If you wind up talking to an assistant or colleague, ask them to indicate a good time to reach the person to whom you mailed the release. If the person you are trying to contact no longer works there, ask to speak to his or her replacement.
- No matter how often you try to reach the reporter or editor, only leave 2 or 3 phone messages requesting a call back. A barrage of phone messages can be a turn-off. If you do leave a message requesting a call back, specify the best times to reach you — and be sure that you are available to take the call at those times.
- When you reach the reporter or editor, immediately ask if this is a good time to talk. If it isn’t, ask them to specify another, more appropriate time for a conversation.
- To jog the memory of the reporter or editor, begin by summarizing the key points of your release. Then state clearly how you hope the news outlet will use the release, such as including it in calendar listings, sending a reporter to cover the event, or running a feature story in advance of the event.
- Be enthusiastic about the information you are sharing in your release. If you don’t sound interested in the subject, why should they be?
- Explain clearly why the information would be of interest to readers. Why is it important? How is it relevant? What is its news value? Put yourself in the shoes of the professionals.
editor or reporter—why should they care about this?
• Be prepared to answer any and all questions. If you don’t know the answer to a question, offer to call back with the information later in the day or the following morning—and then do so.
• Encourage feedback and dialogue about the material. What are their thoughts and advice on the story, angles, and possible approaches? This makes them more involved with the story and may make them more likely to use it.
• Gently press for a commitment or some indication of how the news outlet may use the release.
• If you don’t receive a commitment, don’t continue to press. Ask if there is additional information you can provide that would be helpful. Then ask when you can call back to find out how the reporter or editor intends to use the release.
• If the editor or reporter appears uninterested, ask if someone else at the publication may be interested in using the material.

Respecting Media Deadlines

• Avoid calling a weekly newspaper on a Monday or Thursday morning. These are often deadline days for weeklies. Other mornings are good, with Friday mornings being the best. Since the deadlines of weekly publications vary, it’s best to check with each publication to determine their deadlines.
• Daily newspapers have various deadlines depending on whether they are published in the morning or evening. Mid-mornings — 9 to 10 a.m. — are the best time to reach a contact at a morning daily; mid- to late afternoons — after 2:30 pm — may be best for reaching someone at an afternoon daily. But anytime could be a deadline for a daily print reporter. When you call, always ask if he or she has time to talk.
• The best time to call TV newsrooms is early morning, between 7 and 10 a.m. Never call between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m.—when assignments are being made and editors are meeting to prepare the day’s schedule — or between 4 and 7 p.m.—when the show is either on the air or about to go on the air.

Developing a Media Kit

Many organizations and individuals who are in regular contact with the media find it helpful to develop a media kit that includes additional background information that may be useful to a reporter covering a story.
Media kits, for example, could be developed for an association branch or chapter, a school guidance and counseling program, a university counseling center, a community agency or one of its programs, a private practice, or for yourself if you make regular public presentations.

Media kits are also appropriate when you are sponsoring an event that you expect media professionals to attend. They can be used prior to or on the day of the event to help reporters develop stories about the event.

Depending upon your objectives and the focus of the kit, its contents could include:

- If the kit is being developed for a special event, a copy of a news release that spells out all of the key details, including dates, times, names of participants, and names and telephone numbers of contact persons.
- A fact sheet that lists the significant details of your program — the essential who, what, where, when, and why. This might include information about populations served, purpose, accomplishments, awards received, historical information, and the names of key participants. Include the name of a contact person and telephone number.
- Copies of flyers, pamphlets, newsletters and other information you may use in your program or project.
- A fact sheet outlining important statistics about issues relevant to your project or program, such as the incidence of depression, adolescent suicide, and so forth.
- Photographs of key participants, following the guidelines outlined above for the use of photographs with news releases.
- Biographical information about yourself and/or key participants. As with news releases, the information should be double-spaced and under 2 pages. Begin with a sentence that sets out important information about the person as they relate to the event, project, or activity you are promoting. For example, “Throughout her career, Jane Jones has focused on improving services for at-risk children and youth...” Next, describe recent activities or accomplishments, particularly those that relate to the project or event. Then provide more historical background about the subject, including education, positions held, accomplishments, and appropriate personal information. Sum up with a concise statement relates back to the project or event you are promoting.
- Reprints of news clippings about the project, program, or activity. If you don’t have clippings that are specifically focused on the project or program, include clippings of articles that are relevant to the general topic, such as articles on truancy, mental illness, divorce, and so forth. Clippings provide greater legitimacy to your project signaling to the media that this is a topic that other reporters have thought merited coverage.
- Anything else that you think would be helpful to a reporter asked to write a story about you or your program or project. In compiling a media kit, you are essentially doing the reporter’s homework for him or her, so try to be thorough.

Package your media kit in a simple pocket folder. If you have folders that are pre-printed with your name and logo on them, good; if not, simply type “MEDIA KIT” on a label, along with the name of your program, project, or activity and the name and telephone number of a contact, and adhere it to the front of the folder. It can be simple as that.

Sending Media Advisories

A media advisory, an abbreviated form of a news release, is the basic tool used to attract media coverage of events and activities. It alerts local news personnel that your event is about to take place.

It is important to keep the information in a media advisory as short and simple as possible, emphasizing only the most relevant facts — the “five Ws” of who, what, when, where and why. Many publicists actually use these words as their headings. Always include the name and telephone number of someone who can be contacted by the media for more information.

Also highlight any interview or visual opportunities associated with the event.

At least 7 to 10 days prior to the event, mail or deliver the media advisory to assignment desk editors at newspapers and news assignment directors at radio and television stations. You may also want to send the advisory to any reporters who have previously shown interest in the issue.

On the day before the event, fax the advisory again and follow up by telephone. On the day of the event follow up with another telephone call.

A Sample Media Advisory

MEDIA ADVISORY

ATTENTION: ASSIGNMENT EDITOR

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

(date)

CONTACT:  (your name) (telephone number)

PROFESSIONAL COUNSELORS COMMEMORATE COUNSELING AWARENESS MONTH WITH BOOK DONATION TO ANYTOWN PUBLIC LIBRARY

WHEN:  Saturday, May 8, 2004
10:00 am: Debut of new exhibit
11:00 am: Public lecture on stress reduction strategies

WHERE:  Anytown Public Library
Main Reading Room
15 Main Street, Anytown, USA

WHO:  Jane Jones, Director, Anytown Public Library
Sam Smith, President, (State) Counseling Association
Helen Harris, LPC, noted expert on stress

Jones, Smith, and Harris will be available for interviews.

WHY:  The event is being sponsored by the (State) Counseling Association to commemorate Counseling Awareness Month.

Using Public Service Announcements
Public service announcements (PSAs) are short “sound-bites” developed and aired by radio and television stations to satisfy Federal Communications Commission requirements that stations reserve time for community service announcements.

Stations are most interested in PSAs that are locally-originated, address issues specific to the community, and that are not time-limited so that they can be aired in a 2- to 4-month rotation. While “timeless” PSAs are preferred, however, some stations do run a small number of PSAs that highlight specific events and activities.

The simplest form of PSAs are spots read live on the air by an announcer. They range in length from 10 to 60 seconds.

In developing copy for a “live read” public service announcement:

- Follow the basic news release formula of the “five Ws” — who, what, when, where, and why.
- Use a more informal and conversational style.
- Use short words, short sentences, and contractions where possible.
- Be factual and direct, keeping the message simple and gimmick-free.
- To provide the station with as much latitude as possible, write three different versions of your PSA: 10 second (15 to 25 words), 20 second (40 to 45 words), and 30 second (60 to 70 words)
- Follow the basic mechanics for a news release: double space, leave wide margins, one side of the paper. Type only one spot per page.
- In addition, note when you would like the spot to begin airing and the date when it should be “pulled” or no longer aired.
- Address your PSAs to the Public Service Director of local radio and television stations.

A Sample Public Service Announcement

PUBLIC SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT

CONTACT:  (your name)
TELEPHONE:  (day)
         (eve.)
         (today’s date)

FOR USE: on receipt through April 30, 2004

:20 SECONDS

STATION ANNOUNCER: APRIL IS COUNSELING AWARENESS MONTH...WHEN THE AMERICAN COUNSELING ASSOCIATION CELEBRATES THE WORK OF PROFESSIONAL COUNSELORS IN HELPING CHILDREN AND ADULTS MASTER THE CHALLENGES OF LIFE. FOR A FREE COPY OF PROFESSIONAL COUNSELORS HELPING PEOPLE, CONTACT THE AMERICAN COUNSELING ASSOCIATION AT (800) 347-6647.

###
“Pitching” Feature Story Ideas to the Media

In many cases, your media outreach goals may include seeking feature stories on important issues or projects you are involved with in the community or on different aspects of your work as a professional counselor. To do that, you’ll need to pitch your story idea to a media professional.

Pitching begins by writing a short succinct letter that outlines your story idea to a specific media professional who may have an interest in the idea.

It’s key that you target a specific individual at a news outlet, and not simply direct your letter “to the editor” or blanket the entire staff with the same, exact letter. Take some time to review the responsibilities of key personnel and some of the issues they’ve covered before. Identify the media professionals who would be most interested in the story idea you are pitching.

Your letter should no more than one page. The ingredients are simple:

Date

Bob Jones
Health and Lifestyle Editor
Anytown News
Anytown, USA

Dear Mr. Jones,

Dieting and concern about weight and physical appearance preoccupies women of all ages in our community, often to an unhealthy extent. The extraordinary value that society places upon being thin contributes to low self-esteem and depression and, in some cases, eating disorders, among women who feel that they fall short of the ideal.

As a licensed professional counselor, I have worked with many women and girls to help them develop a healthier perspective on issues of weight and dieting and a strong sense of self-esteem that is not grounded in physical appearance. I have also treated several young women with eating disorders.

Anytown News can play an important role in helping to educate women in our community about this issue. How do you know when an interest in dieting and fitness has become unhealthy or excessive? What are the signs that you or someone you know has an eating disorder? Is it appropriate for adolescent women to diet? How can you make yourself feel good about yourself no matter what your weight?

I hope you will consider writing a story about dieting and women’s self-esteem. I’d like to speak with you further about this issue and suggest others you may want to contact if you decide to write a story.
I have also enclosed additional information about the issue for your review. I look forward to speaking with you about this soon.

Briefly introduce the topic or issue

Present your expertise or role in addressing the issue; present more information

Explain why the issue is newsworthy; suggest story ideas and possible angles for coverage

Say what you want: A story!
   Offer to be a resource
   Enclose more information

In writing your pitch letter:

• Be brief and to the point.
• Highlight statistics, facts, and other interesting details.
• Suggest a variety of story ideas and angles, but don’t tell the media professional what to write.
• Write as if you are having a conversation with the recipient of the letter. Avoid excessive formality and jargon.

---Following Up By Telephone---

Follow up by telephone with the media professional several days after sending the letter and bring it to his or her attention, determine the level of interest and, if possible, discuss the issue further.

The rules and suggestions for making follow-up phone calls to the media after mailing a news release outlined on page 25 applies to these follow-up phone calls as well.

If the media professional seems uninterested in the topic or issue you are “pitching,” suggest that he or she use you as a resource when writing stories on similar or related topics in the future. If he or she seems to have time to talk, use the conversation as an opportunity to find out more about their interests and stories they may be working on.

Above all, don’t take rejection personally or as an indication that you shouldn’t try to “pitch” another story idea in the future. There is enormous competition for the time and attention of media professionals.

It may take several “pitches” before you hit a home run.

---Working With Television---

As the number of Americans who regularly read newspapers and magazines continues to decline, television has become increasingly central in delivering news and information to the public. Unfortunately, it is also the toughest to get attention from, particularly in large markets where competition for exposure is keen. Generally all the suggestions and guidelines we have outlined for working with print media also apply to working with television. However, television does have some special needs that should be attuned to.

-- Events Coverage --

- Structure your event to offer some visual appeal. For example, invite a celebrity or well-known figures to make an appearance at the event, or create an unusual and colorful presentation that will lend itself to visuals.
- Highlight the visual elements of the event in the news release or media advisory you develop for the event.
- Direct your release or advisory to the news assignment editors at least a week in advance.
- Conduct follow-up calls several days prior to the event, the morning of the event, and immediately before the start of the event.
- Be sure to identify a spokesperson who will be available for impromptu stand-up interviews at the event. Alert the TV assignment editors in advance that your spokesperson will be available to answer questions.

-- Feature Stories --

- Examine the stories you want to tell to identify visual elements. For example, the use of hypnosis or biofeedback could be explored by staging a demonstration using volunteers, followed by interviews with the counselor about how the techniques work and their effectiveness. Similarly, finding and using career information on the Internet could be demonstrated.
- Pitch feature style stories to a specific reporter whose beat includes related issues, rather than an assignment editor whose main concern is assigning reporters to cover breaking news.
- Offer to assist with identifying experts and setting up visuals.
- Provide plenty of written background material on the topic you are pitching.

-- Talk Show Appearances --

- Review the format and tone of a talk show to determine whether it is an appropriate forum for you. Although audiences for sensational “trash TV” may be large, these shows are unlikely to address issues important to the profession in a thoughtful manner.
- Based on your research, determine angles or story ideas with the most appeal to the audience of a particular TV talk show.
- Try to tie your story ideas to current news events and “hot topics.”
- Develop dramatic or colorful visual aids to support your presentation.
- Be aware that many talk shows book guests as far as two months in advance, so unless your issue or story is extremely timely, prepare to get in line.
- Be aware that February, May, July and November are sweeps months, when program ratings determine future advertising rates, as well as the survival of a program. More sensational and emotional topics tend to dominate the talk show airwaves during these periods.
- Contact the talk show producer (not the talk show personality) in writing to describe the angle or issue you’re pitching, your expertise in the topic, and any visual aids that are available.
- Follow up with a phone call to ensure receipt of your letter and to re-emphasize the key elements of your pitch.
- When an interview is confirmed verbally, promptly send a confirmation letter describing your understanding of the specifics and parameters of the interview.

Working With Radio
In working with radio news professionals, you should follow the same general guidelines outlined above for working with professional in other media, with a few exceptions:

- Since radio is an aural medium, don’t invite radio to cover an event that is primarily visual unless there are celebrity interview opportunities.
- Radio exists on “sound bites,” so be sure the information you share is succinct and to the point.
- Radio talk shows offer excellent opportunities to reach the public, but know the audience and general focus and tenor of a show before you pitch a story idea and/or guest appearance. This is particularly important if the show invites listeners to call in with questions for the interview subject. Different talk show hosts attract different types of listeners. Be sure that the show offers a forum that is consistent with your media outreach goals and will provide an opportunity to reach the audiences who are most important to you.

Conducting An Interview

Well, you’ve got your wish, you’ve got the media’s attention. There’s a reporter on the line or outside your door who wants to interview you. Now what?

The following are some suggestions for how you can make the most of interview opportunities:

- Know your interviewer. If possible, do some homework about the journalist who will be interviewing you. Review past articles he or she has written to give you some insight into the journalist’s style and technique. If one of the journalist’s past articles impressed you, feel free to share this as the interview begins.

- Take the time to prepare. Don’t agree to a sudden, off-the-cuff interview unless you feel comfortable thinking quickly on your feet. Generally, you’ll feel more comfortable if you have some time to prepare and collect your thoughts. If the journalist is on deadline and is looking for a quick response, don’t be afraid to ask if you can call back a short time later. Taking even just a few minutes to focus and collect your thoughts before an interview may be helpful. It’s great that the journalist is interested in the information you have to share, but if you’re feeling rushed and unprepared, you won’t be able to share that information in the manner you want.

- Stay focused. Only plan to make three or four major points in the interview. Try to relate your answers back to these points.

- Saying “I don’t know” is okay. You should be ready to answer all questions about your subject. However, if you don’t have an answer, say so. The journalist will understand. If you can readily obtain the information, offer to provide it later and do so. If the question is outside your expertise, say so, and suggest others who could more appropriately respond.

- Don’t be shaken by ignorant or inappropriate questions. During the opening stages of an interview, the journalist may ask very fundamental questions that reveal his or her ignorance of the topic. Use this as an opportunity to teach. The same holds true for an arrogant or hostile interviewer. You have nothing to gain by losing your temper or expressing frustration. You will remain in control of the situation if you are patient and relaxed.

- Always assume that everything you say is “on the record.” Unless you have a long-time relationship with a journalist, don’t ask to speak “off the record” or have your name withheld as a source. From the moment you say hello, everything you say is fair game for inclusion in an article or broadcast piece, whether the journalist is tape recording the interview or simply taking notes. Choose your words carefully.
• Assure accuracy. Publications will almost universally deny you an opportunity to review an article before it is published. They consider editing to be their responsibility. The best way that you can assure accuracy is by reviewing or summing up informally the key points you made during the interview at its conclusion. (“As I mentioned earlier…”, or “I can’t emphasize enough the importance of…”). Also, ask at the conclusion of the interview if there are any issues or questions that need further clarification.

• Repeat the question. Try repeating some of the interviewer’s questions as part of your replies. When you are dealing with print journalists, in particular, this can enhance the likelihood that your quote will be used in the final article.

Special Rules for Television

• Keep your statements as brief and succinct as possible. You must be ready to get your point across in statements of 50 words or less. Although the interview may run for a long period of time, only 10 to 20 seconds of your comments may actually be used. This does not mean that you should rush your answers or speak too quickly. It does mean that you should consciously seek to get your main points across in as few words as possible.

• Maintain eye contact with your interviewer. Don’t look at the camera. Ignore technicians and others in the studio. Focus on your interviewer.

• Dress conservatively. Dark suits with light blue shirts are best for men, and a solid color business dress or suit for women. Avoid white. Men should not wear boldly patterned ties. Women should avoid heavy necklaces and bracelets and large earrings.

• If you regularly wear glasses, wear them during the interview. You’ll look and feel more comfortable. Never wear polar-gray glasses or sunglasses, however.

• Speak informally and casually. Have a conversation with your interviewer.

• Keep hand gestures small and at a minimum. They can be distracting and jarring for the audience.

Join the ACA Spokesperson Network!

The American Counseling Association regularly receives calls from journalists who are interested in speaking with professional counselors with expertise on a wide range of issues. Recent inquiries have come from the Wall Street Journal, People, Ladies Home Journal, the Associated Press, Newsweek, Philadelphia Inquirer, Good Housekeeping, Los Angeles Times, and even BBC Radio in London. ACA staff also actively “pitches” professional counselors as sources for stories to print and electronic journalists from national media outlets.

The sources we use are ACA members who have joined the ACA Spokesperson Network. Joining requires completing a form that asks you to specify the issues upon which you have expertise and want to be called upon as a source. We are always looking for new members to add to the Spokesperson Network, and if you feel comfortable talking to journalists, we encourage you to register.
Writing Letters To The Editor

Writing letters to the editors of local newspapers can also be an effective means of enhancing public awareness of the counseling profession and counseling issues. Many readers of this section of the newspaper are well-educated, concerned citizens—the individuals who influence how the community perceives professional counselors.

If they touch on the concerns and work of professional counselors, a wide range of current issues in the news, as well as particular articles, can be appropriate topics for letters to the editor. Use the letter as an opportunity to share your expertise by commenting or elaborating further on an issue. Early in the letter, be sure to mention that you are a professional counselor, and include any information that may be appropriate about your credentials and specific areas of expertise.

If you are responding to a specific article, keep in mind that some readers may have missed the original article. Reference the article clearly in your letter and provide some basic information about its contents so that all readers will be able to appreciate the points you are making.

You can also write letters to the editor to highlight commemorative events, including Counseling Awareness Month. A sample letter that you can adapt for this purpose is included below.

Before composing your letter, review the submission guidelines on format and length of letters to the editor. These guidelines can usually be found in the editorial section.

Sample Letter To The Editor
For Counseling Awareness Month

To the Editor:

We are very fortunate to have in this community hundreds of professional counselors, highly trained and educated to help children and adults master the challenges of everyday living. During Counseling Awareness Month in April we salute their contributions to positive mental health. More importantly, we want your readers to know about the many ways counselors serve. The preventive measures that they advocate encourage people of all ages, cultures and physical capabilities to strive to reach maximum potential in their personal lives, their education and their careers. These dedicated professionals make a difference in peoples lives!
You will find professional counselors in a wide variety of settings. They bring about positive change at schools and universities and in hospitals, mental health agencies, rehabilitation facilities, business and industry, correctional institutions, religious organizations, community centers and in private practice, just to name a few. They touch our lives at just about every phase possible.

For example, you will find counselors who are dedicated to serving children with special needs. Professional counselors help by identifying these children so that the educational system can meet their needs more readily. Adolescents benefit from the programs and intervention strategies that counselors design to address and prevent alcohol and drug abuse, youth suicide, and disruptive and antisocial behavior. Adults rely on counselors when weighing career decisions or especially in stressful times of sudden work transitions, such as unemployment, promotion or reassignment.

Older adults look to professional counselors when adapting to the physical and emotional transitions that accompany the aging process, including retirement, illness, disability or life on a fixed income.

These are just a few illustrations of the impact that professional counselors have on our lives.

We salute them and encourage your readers to consider how professional counseling can make a difference in their lives.

Sincerely,

---

Participating In Counseling Awareness Month And Other Commemorative Events

April is Counseling Awareness Month!

Throughout April, professional counselors around the nation will be undertaking special projects and initiatives to promote greater public awareness of the counseling profession. April is when it all comes together—when professional counselors set aside time to use one or more of the many ideas and strategies outlined in this guide to celebrate publicly our profession.

We hope you will join the celebration by:

• Collaborating with other professional counselors in your community on a group service activity;

• Delivering a presentation to a community organization or at a public library, bookstore, or local business;

• Sponsoring an event that you invite the public or media to attend;

• Seeking media coverage of an issue important to your work;

• Showing your pride in your profession by sharing articles from counseling publications with colleagues or even by simply hanging a counseling poster in your office;

• Inventing your own projects to promote awareness of our profession and its contributions to improving the lives of people throughout their development.

Ideally, public awareness efforts should be integrated into the work you do every day. The reality, however, is that it’s difficult for many of us to find time to make public awareness a regular part of our work. With so many things on our “to do” list, we often end up putting public awareness at the bottom of the list.

In April, if not throughout the year, we encourage you to move public awareness to the top of your “to do” list. You deserve the recognition. You make a powerful contribution to the lives of the people that you work with.

Celebrate your work!

Participating In Other Counselor Commemoratives

In addition to Counseling Awareness Month, there are three other important commemorative events initiated by ACA divisions that highlight the contributions and work of professional counselors.

These commemoratives also offer opportunities for public awareness events and activities. Public awareness materials, and additional information about these initiatives, may be obtained by contacting the national office of the sponsoring division.

Mental Health Counselors Week
May 3-7, 2004

Mental Health Counselors Week is the first full week in May. For more information, contact:

American Mental Health Counselors Assn
801 North Fairfax Street - Suite 304
Alexandria, VA 22314
(800) 326-2642

National Career Development Month
November 2004

National Career Development Month, sponsored by the National Career Development Association. For more information, contact:

National Career Development Association
4700 Reed Road - Suite
Columbus, OH 43220
888) 326-1750

National School Counseling Week
February 2-6, 2004

This week is the highlight of year-long activities, giving school counselors the opportunity to celebrate their unique contributions. For more information, contact:

American School Counselor Association
Participating In Other Commemoratives Throughout the Year

Numerous other groups and associations also sponsor commemorative events that relate to the work and interests of professional counselors. Participating in these commemorative activities offers valuable opportunities to raise public awareness about the counseling profession and to highlight particular aspects of counseling practice and the values and ideals of the profession. They also offer opportunities for networking and collaboration with others.

We have assembled a list of some of the commemorative events that will be held over the next year that may be of interest to you. Also included is information about how to contact sponsoring organizations to learn more about the initiative and how you may participate. Many of these organizations also offer free or low-cost public awareness materials.

January 2004

Autism Awareness Month

Autism Awareness Month is a comprehensive effort to reach out to the public to share information about autism. For more information, contact:

Autism Society of America
7910 Woodmont Avenue – Suite 650
Bethesda, MD, 20814-30
(800) 3-Autism

February 2004

Black History Month

Black History Month recognizes the achievements and contributions of African-Americans to American life.

Wise Health Consumer Month

Wise Health Consumer Month is set aside for employers to implement and promote wellness programs to their employees. For more information, contact:

American Institute for Preventive Medicine
30445 Northwestern Highway – Suite 350

Farmington Hills, MI 48334
(810) 539-1800 ext. 225

Eating Disorders Awareness Week

February 22-29, 2004

Eating Disorders Awareness Week seeks to expand public awareness of eating disorders and to challenge cultural attitudes and values that contribute to eating disorders. To obtain a free information packet, contact:

Screening for Mental Health, Inc.
One Washington Street, Ste. 304
Wellesley Hills, MA 02481-1706
(781) 239-0071

March 2004

Brain Awareness Week

March 15-21, 2004

Brain Awareness Month is dedicated to increasing public understanding about the brain and the many contributions that are made by medical research in addressing diseases and disorders of the brain that annually affect more than 600 million people. For information contact:
National Colorectal Cancer Awareness Month

Fifth annual nationwide effort to educate the public that colorectal cancer is preventable, treatable and beatable. For information, contact:
Cancer Research and Prevention Foundation 1600 Duke Street, Suite 500 Alexandria, VA 22314 1-800-227-2732 703-836-4412 Fax: 703-836-4413 Enica.Lewis@preventcancer.org

Children and Health Care Week

Children and Health Care Week is a public awareness campaign focusing on the unique needs of children and families in health care settings. For information, or to locate a participating hospital, contact:
Assoc. for the Care of Children’s Health 19 Mantua Road Mt Royal, NJ 08061 (609) 224-1742

Deaf History Month

Deaf History Month commemorates three events in the history of deaf Americans: the victory of the Deaf President Now movement at Gallaudet University, the founding of Gallaudet, and the creation of the first public school for the deaf. For materials about the deaf community and its history, contact:
Friends of Libraries for Deaf Access 9126 Fowler Lane Lanham, MD 20706 (301) 572-5168

April 2004

National Alcohol Awareness Month

Alcohol Awareness Month helps raise awareness among community prevention leaders and citizens about the problem of underage drinking. The month concentrates on community grassroots activities. For more information and to obtain a free awareness kit, contact:
National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence, Inc. 20 Exchange Place, Ste. 2902 New York, NY 10005 (212) 269-7797

National Autism Awareness Month

Autism Awareness Month is an effort to promote better understanding of autism and how it affects children as well as adults. For more information, contact:
Autism Society of America 7910 Woodmont Avenue - Suite 650 Bethesda, MD, 20814-30 (800) 3AUTISM

National Child Abuse Prevention Month

National Child Abuse Prevention Month is a national public awareness campaign to educate parents, teachers and community leaders about the signs of child abuse. For more information, contact:
Prevent Child Abuse America 200 S. Michigan Avenue – 17th Floor Chicago, IL 60604 (312) 663-3520

National Public Health Week April 5-11, 2004

This national celebration provides many with an opportunity to recognize the contributions of public health to the nation’s well-being as well as help focus public attention on major health issues in our communities. For more information, contact:
American Public Health Association 800 I Street NW Washington, DC 20001
May 2004

National Mental Health Month

National Mental Health Month educates Americans about mental health and illness. A free kit and media materials, contact:

National Mental Health Association
1021 Prince St.
Alexandria, VA 22314-2971
(800) 969-NMHA

National Suicide Awareness Week
May 2-8, 2004

In 1999 the Surgeon General declared for the first time that suicide is a serious public health threat. It is the eighth leading cause of death in the US. This week is designed to bring public awareness to suicide.

American Association of Suicidology
4102 Connecticut Ave. NW, Suite 408
Washington, DC 20008
202/ 237-2280

Older Americans Month

Older Americans Month is observed throughout the United States by aging advocacy organizations, state and area agencies on aging, and Native American tribal service providers. To obtain a planning packet and other information, contact:

Moya Benoit Thompson
U.S. Administration on Aging
200 Independence Ave., SW
Washington, DC 20201
(202) 401-4541

National Asian/Pacific-American Heritage Month

May has been designated as National Asian/Pacific-American Heritage Month to recognize the contributions of Asians and Pacific Islanders to American life.

National Safe Kids Week
May 1-8, 2004

National Safe Kids Week focuses on helping parents and caregivers fight preventable injury, the leading killer of children ages 14 and under. National Safe Kids Week addresses the risks children face at home, at play, and while traveling. For more information contact:

National SAFE KIDS Campaign
111 Michigan Ave NW
Washington, DC 20010-2970
(202) 662-0600

National Nursing Home Week
May 9-15, 2004

National Nursing Home Week seeks to familiarize the public with long-term care facilities and the services they provide. Activities are conducted locally by long-term care facilities. For more information, contact:

American Health Care Association
1201 L Street NW
Washington, DC 20005
(202) 842-4444

June 2004

National HIV Testing Day
June 27, 2004

National HIV Testing Day seeks to increase awareness about HTV and encourage voluntary testing and counseling. For more information, contact:

National Association of People with AIDS
1413 K Street, NW – 7th floor
Washington, DC 20005
(202) 898-0414

National Men’s Health Week
June 14-20, 2004

The purpose of National Men’s Health Week is to raise awareness among society, especially among men, of the importance of preventative health behavior in the early detection and treatment of male health problems.

National Men’s Health Foundation
154-182 East Minor St
Emmaus, PA 18098
1 800-955-2004

September 2004

National Rehabilitation Week
September 19-25, 2004

National Rehabilitation Week celebrates the determination of more than 43 million people with disabilities in America and salutes the dedicated professionals who provide rehabilitation care. The week also calls attention to the unmet needs of our nation’s disabled citizens. For information and to receive a free brochure, contact:

National Rehabilitation Awareness Foundation
P.O. Box 71
Scranton, PA 18501
(570) 341-4637

National Hispanic Heritage Month

The purpose of Hispanic Heritage Month is to encourage Hispanic awareness among all U.S. citizens and to recognize the many contributions of Latinos to life in the United States.

Prostate Cancer Awareness Week
September 12-18

For more information, contact:

American Fdn for Urological Disease

October 2004

Month of the Young Adolescent

Initiated by the National Middle School Association in collaboration with ACA and 28 other national organizations, the Month of the Young Adolescent seeks to educate parents and the general public about the needs of young adolescents. For more information, contact:

National Middle School Association
2600 Corporate Exchange Drive - Suite 370
Columbus, Ohio 43231
(800) 528-NMSA

American Counseling Association
(800)347-6647

Domestic Violence Awareness Month

During Domestic Violence Awareness Month, local programs, state coalitions and national organizations conduct awareness campaigns and special events to educate the public about the problem of domestic violence and its effect on the victims and community. To learn more about how you can participate, contact:

Natl. Coalition Against Domestic Violence
P. O. Box 18749
Denver, CO 80218-0749
(303) 839-1852

Helpful Resources for Use in Public Awareness Materials

To assist you in your public awareness activities, we have assembled a number of
Role Statement: The School Counselor

The American School Counselor Association developed the following statement in 1990.

The American School Counselor Association recognizes and supports the implementation of comprehensive developmental counseling programs at all educational levels. The programs are designed to help all students develop their educational, social, career, and personal strengths and to become responsible and productive citizens. School counselors help create and organize these programs, as well as provide appropriate counselor interventions.

School counseling programs are developmental by design, focusing on needs, interests, and issues related to the various stages of student growth. There are objectives, activities, special services and expected outcomes, with an emphasis on helping students to learn more effectively and efficiently. There is a commitment to individual uniqueness and the maximum development of human potential. A counseling program is an integral part of a school’s total educational program.

The School Counselor

The school counselor is a certified professional educator who assists students, teachers, parents, and administrators. Three generally recognized helping processes used by the counselor are counseling, consulting, and coordinating: 1) Counseling is a complex helping process in which the counselor establishes a trusting and confidential working relationship. The focus is on problem-solving, decision-making, and discovering personal meaning related to learning and development; 2) Consultation is a cooperative process in which the counselor-consultant assists others to think through problems and to develop skills that make them more effective in working with students; 3) Coordination is a leadership process in which the counselor helps organize and manage a school’s counseling program and related services.

School counselors are employed in elementary, middle/junior high, senior high, and postsecondary schools. Their work is differentiated by attention to age-specific developmental stages of growth and related interests, tasks, and challenges. School counselors are human behavior and relationship specialists who organize their work around fundamental interventions.

Counselor interventions have sometimes been referred to as functions, services, approaches, tasks, activities, or jobs. They have, at times, been viewed as roles themselves, helping to create the image of the counselor. In a comprehensive developmental counseling program, school counselors organize their work schedules around the following basic interventions:

- Individual Counseling. Individual counseling is a personal and private interaction between a counselor and a student in which they work together on a problem or topic of interest. A face-to-face, one-to-one meeting with a counselor provides a student maximum privacy in which to freely explore ideas, feelings, and behaviors. School counselors establish trust and build a helping relationship. They respect the privacy of information, always considering actions in terms of the rights, integrity, and welfare of students.
Counselors are obligated by law and ethical standards to report and to refer a case when a person’s welfare is in jeopardy. It is a counselor’s duty to inform an individual of the conditions and limitations under which assistance may be provided.

- Small Group Counseling. Small group counseling involves a counselor working with two or more students together. Group size generally ranges from five to eight members. Group discussion may be relatively unstructured or may be based on structured learning activities. Group members have an opportunity to learn from each other. They can share ideas, give and receive feedback, increase their awareness, gain new knowledge, practice skills, and think about their goals and actions. Group discussions may be problem-centered, where attention is given to particular concerns or problems. Discussions may be growth-centered, where general topics are related to personal and academic development.

- Large Group Guidance. Large group meetings offer the best opportunity to provide guidance to the largest number of students in a school. Counselor first work with students in large groups wherever appropriate because it is the most efficient use of time. Large group work involves cooperative learning methods, in which the larger group is divided into smaller working groups under the supervision of a counselor or teacher. The guidance and counseling curriculum, composed of organized objectives and activities, is delivered by teachers or counselors in classrooms or advisory groups. School counselors and teachers may co-lead some activities. Counselors develop and present special guidance units which give attention to particular developmental issues or areas of concern in their respective schools and they help prepare teachers to deliver part of the guidance and counseling curriculum.

- Consultation. The counselor as a consultant helps people to be more effective in working with others. Consultation helps individuals think through problems and concerns, acquire more knowledge and skill, and become more objective and self-confident. This intervention can take place in individual or group conferences, or through staff-development activities.

- Coordination. Coordination as a counselor in intervention is the process of managing various indirect services which benefit students and being a liaison between school and community agencies. It may include organizing special events which involve parents or resource people in the community in guidance projects. It often entails collecting data and disseminating information. Counselors might coordinate a student needs assessment, the interpretation of standardized tests, a child study team, or a guidance related teacher or parent education program.

The Preparation of School Counselors

School counselors are prepared for their work through the study of interpersonal relationships and behavioral sciences in graduate education courses in accredited colleges and universities. Preparation involves special training in counseling theory and skills related to school settings. Particular attention is given to personality and human development theories and research, including career and life-skills development; learning theories, the nature of change and the helping process; theories and approaches to appraisal, multi-cultural and community awareness; educational environments; curriculum development; professional ethics; and, program planning, management, and evaluation.

Counselors are prepared to use the basic interventions in a school setting, with special emphasis on the study of helping relationships, facilitative skills, brief counseling; group dynamics and group learning activities; family systems; peer helper programs, multi-cultural and cross-cultural helping approaches; and, educational and community resources for special school populations.
School counselors are aware of their own professional competencies and responsibilities within the school setting. They know when and how to refer or involve other professionals. They are accountable for their actions and participate in appropriate studies and research related to their work.

Responsibility to the Profession

To assure high quality practice, counselors are committed to continued professional growth and personal development. They are active members of the American Counseling Association and the American School Counselor Association, as well as state and local professional associations which foster and promote school counseling. They also uphold the ethical and professional standards of these associations.

School counselors meet the state certification standards and abide by the laws in the states where they are working. Counselors work cooperatively with individuals and organizations to promote the overall development of children, youth, and families in their communities.

Frequently Asked Questions About Career Counseling

Developed by the National Career Development Association

1. What is a career counselor?

Career counselors hold a graduate degree in counseling with a specialization in career counseling. Services of career counselors differ, depending on the counselor’s level of competence, the setting, client needs, and other factors. National Certified Career Counselors, Registered Professional Career Counselors, and other professional career counselors help people make and carry out decisions and plans related to life/career directions.

2. What do career counselors do?

Strategies and techniques of professional career counselors are tailored to the specific needs of the person seeking help. It is likely that the career counselor will do one or more of the following:

- Conduct individual and group counseling sessions to help clarify life/career goals
- Administer and interpret tests and inventories to assess abilities, interests, and so forth, and to identify career options
- Encourage exploratory activities through assignments and planning experiences
- Utilize career planning systems and occupational information systems to help individuals better understand the world of work
- Provide opportunities for improving decision-making skills
- Assist in developing individualized career plans
- Teach job hunting strategies and skills and assist in the development of resumes
- Help resolve potential personal conflicts on the job through practice in human relations skills
- Assist in understanding the integration of work and other life roles
- Provide support for persons experiencing job stress, job loss, and/or career transition.

3. What training and credentials do career counselors have?

The designation “National Certified Career Counselor” signifies that the career counselor has achieved the highest certification in the profession. Furthermore, it means that the Career Counselor has:

- Earned a graduate degree in counseling or a related professional field from a regionally accredited institution;
- Completed supervised counseling experience which included career counseling;
- Acquired a minimum of three years of full-time career development work experience;
- Successfully completed a knowledge-based certification examination.

Professional career counselors may also be trained in a one-or two-year graduate level counselor preparation program with a specialty in career counseling. They may be licensed by state counselor licensure boards or certified by the National Board for Certified Counselors.

4. How can I find a career counselor?

A listing of National Certified Career Counselors in your state may be obtained from:

National Board for Certified Counselors
3-D Terrace Way
Greensboro, MC 27403-3660
(336) 547-0607

Many states have counselor licensure laws and state boards that oversee this licensing process. Check your local phone directory under state government or check with your public library for the address and phone number of your state counselor licensing board. You may contact them for a list of licensed counselors or to check the credentials of a specific counselor.

Use the telephone yellow pages. Check under career counseling. As you scan names, check to see if they describe their credentials in the yellow page ad. When you call, ask these types of questions:

- Are you a National Certified Career Counselor?
- Are you licensed to practice counseling in this state?
- Are you a member of a national or state career counseling professional association?
- What special training do you have in the area of career?

Ask friends and family for the names of career counselors with whom they have worked.

Check with the library to find lists of career services in educational and community agencies such as colleges, community colleges, public school adult education programs, state employment service, vocational rehabilitation, or special career services.

5. What do career counseling clients have the right to expect?

You may ask career counselors for a detailed explanation of services, fees, time commitments, and a copy of their ethical guidelines. Select a counselor who is professionally trained, who specifies fees and services upon request, and who lets you choose the services you desire. Make certain you can terminate the services at any time, paying only for services rendered.

Career counseling requires the expertise of a trained professional. Be wary of services that promise you more money, quick promotions, or guaranteed resumes. Career issues are usually complex and require a multifaceted approach by a career counselor who has extensive education, training, and experience. Be skeptical of services that make promises of more money, better jobs, resumes that get speedy results, or an immediate solution to career problems. Professional career counselors are expected to follow the ethical guidelines of organizations such as the National Career Development Association, the National Board for Certified Counselors, and the American Counseling Association.
Professional codes of ethics advise against grandiose guarantees and promises, exorbitant fees, breaches of confidentiality, and related matters of misconduct. You may wish to ask for a detailed explanation of services offered, your financial and time commitments, and a copy of the ethical guidelines used by the career counselor or service you are considering.

Ask any counselor you are considering for a detailed expiration of services (career counseling, assessment, employment search strategy planning, resume writing, and so forth). Make sure you understand the services, your degree of involvement, and your financial commitment.

6. What are some questions I can ask myself about my own career?

As you think about your career, it might help to ask yourself these questions:

• How satisfied are you with your current job? What are the main satisfactions and dissatisfactions? What are your hopes and fears regarding your current job?

• What can you do to make your current job better? How might you change aspects of your job? How might you change work groups or projects? How might you change the meaning of work in your life? If you decided to do so, how might you change jobs?

• What are your goals related to work and your career? In the near future? In the long-term future? What are your long and short term priorities for work and your career?

• What actions, if any, do you need to take regarding your job and career? Now? In three months? Long term?

7. What did American adults say about their careers in a recent NCDA/NOICC Gallup Survey?

Adults want quality career counseling and information.

• 72% would seek more information on career options if starting over;

• 80% (who sought it) found professional career counseling helpful;

• 78% found career information available;

• 53% see a need for more education or training to increase their earning power.

Adults perceived a need for more education and training

• 48% of college graduates

• 66% of those with some college education

• 47% of high school graduates

• 41% of non high school graduates

What do adults expect to do for the next three years?

• 62% expect to stay with current employer

• 22% expect voluntary job changes

• 52% like their jobs and do not want to leave

Did adults consciously plan their career?

• 32% started present job or career following a plan

• 26% started present job or career by chance.
Professional Counselors as Providers of Mental Health Care

Licensed professional counselors provide quality mental health and substance abuse care to millions of Americans and are recognized as an important provider of preventive behavioral health services and services in rural areas. Roughly 80% of managed behavioral health care companies either employ or contract with licensed professional counselors (Business Insurance, 1999), and counselors comprise a large percentage of the workforce employed in community mental health centers, agencies, and organizations.

The practice of professional counseling includes, but is not limited to, the diagnosis and treatment of mental and emotional disorders, including addictions; psycho-educational techniques aimed at the prevention of such disorders: consultation to individuals, couples, families, groups, and organizations; and research into more effective therapeutic treatment modalities. Counselors are trained in the provision of counseling and therapy, as well as the etiology of mental illness and substance abuse disorders.

State Licensure Requirements

Over 80,000 professional counselors are licensed or certified in 46 states and the District of Columbia. Licensure requirements typically include:

- Education 48 to 60 hours of graduate-level training, including a master’s or doctoral degree in counseling from a regionally-accredited institution of higher education.
- Experience completion of 3,000 hours of supervised clinical experience, performed within two years.
- Examination passage of the National Counselor Examination (NCE) or a similar state-developed exam.
- Ethics adherence to a strict Code of Ethics in professional practice.

In states without licensure or certification laws, professional counselors may be certified by the National Board for Certified Counselors (NBCC).
Severity of Illnesses Treated by Mental Health Professionals

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Discipline</th>
<th>Chronically and Persistently Mentally Ill</th>
<th>Moderate to Severely Impaired (DSM-IV)</th>
<th>Life, Stress and Coping Problems</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Professional Counselors</td>
<td>11%</td>
<td>36%</td>
<td>40%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Psychiatrists</td>
<td>29%</td>
<td>40%</td>
<td>30%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Psychologists</td>
<td>11%</td>
<td>36%</td>
<td>29%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Social Workers</td>
<td>9%</td>
<td>41%</td>
<td>35%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marriage and Family Therapists</td>
<td>12%</td>
<td>36%</td>
<td>39%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Average Duration of Treatment

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Number of Sessions</th>
<th>All Therapists</th>
<th>Professional Counselors</th>
<th>Psychiatrists</th>
<th>Psychologists</th>
<th>Social Workers</th>
<th>Marriage and Family Therapists</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>0-3 sessions</td>
<td>2.8%</td>
<td>9%</td>
<td>3%</td>
<td>4%</td>
<td>2%</td>
<td>1%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4-6 sessions</td>
<td>10%</td>
<td>18%</td>
<td>6%</td>
<td>7%</td>
<td>11%</td>
<td>5%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7-10 sessions</td>
<td>28%</td>
<td>34%</td>
<td>22%</td>
<td>23%</td>
<td>32%</td>
<td>33%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11-15 sessions</td>
<td>29%</td>
<td>17%</td>
<td>27%</td>
<td>22%</td>
<td>20%</td>
<td>32%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15+ sessions</td>
<td>34%</td>
<td>26%</td>
<td>37%</td>
<td>40%</td>
<td>34%</td>
<td>24%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Source: National survey of mental health professionals in full- or part-time private practice conducted by Practice Strategies. December 1997

Services Offered by Mental Health Professionals

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Services</th>
<th>All Therapists</th>
<th>Professional Counselors</th>
<th>Psychiatrists</th>
<th>Psychologists</th>
<th>Social Workers</th>
<th>Mar/Family Therapists</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Individual Therapy</td>
<td>95%</td>
<td>97%</td>
<td>100%</td>
<td>95%</td>
<td>95%</td>
<td>96%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group Therapy</td>
<td>40%</td>
<td>52%</td>
<td>50%</td>
<td>36%</td>
<td>42%</td>
<td>40%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pain Control</td>
<td>27%</td>
<td>25%</td>
<td>na</td>
<td>33%</td>
<td>21%</td>
<td>24%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Biofeedback</td>
<td>8%</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>na</td>
<td>12%</td>
<td>4%</td>
<td>4%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chronic Illness</td>
<td>43%</td>
<td>43%</td>
<td>34%</td>
<td>45%</td>
<td>41%</td>
<td>43%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Substance Abuse treatment</td>
<td>44%</td>
<td>51%</td>
<td>34%</td>
<td>42%</td>
<td>49%</td>
<td>44%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Psychological Testing</td>
<td>34%</td>
<td>23%</td>
<td>32%</td>
<td>66%</td>
<td>7%</td>
<td>13%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Most Frequently Paid Fees for Individual Therapy Sessions (medians)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Source of Payment</th>
<th>Professional Counselors</th>
<th>Psychiatrists</th>
<th>Psychologists</th>
<th>Social Workers</th>
<th>Mar/Family Therapists</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Direct pay patients</td>
<td>$79</td>
<td>$132</td>
<td>$100</td>
<td>$80</td>
<td>$80</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Managed Care Payments</td>
<td>$60</td>
<td>$95</td>
<td>$70</td>
<td>$60</td>
<td>$60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Third Party Payments</td>
<td>$80</td>
<td>$120</td>
<td>$95</td>
<td>$80</td>
<td>$80</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Source: Fee, Practice, and Managed Care Survey, Ridgewood Financial Institute, Inc. (October 2000)

Scope Of Practice For Rehabilitation Counseling

The following has been adopted by the American Rehabilitation Counseling Association, the Commission on Rehabilitation Counselor Certification, the National Rehabilitation Counseling Association, the National Council on Rehabilitation Education, and the Council on Rehabilitation Education

I. Assumptions

- The Scope of Practice Statement identifies knowledge and skills required for the provision of effective rehabilitation counseling services to persons with physical, mental, developmental, cognitive, and emotional disabilities as embodied in the standards of the profession’s credentialing organizations.

- Several rehabilitation disciplines and related processes (e.g., vocational evaluation, job development and job placement, work adjustment, case management) are tied to the central field of rehabilitation counseling. The field of rehabilitation counseling is a specialty within the rehabilitation profession with counseling at its core, and is differentiated from other related counseling fields.

- The professional scope of rehabilitation counseling practice is also differentiated from an individual scope of practice, which may overlap, but is more specialized than the professional scope. An individual scope of practice is based on one’s own knowledge of the abilities and skills that have been gained through a program of education and professional experience. A person is ethically bound to limit his/her practice to that individual scope of practice

II. Underlying Values

- Facilitation of independence, integration, and inclusion of people with disabilities in employment and the community.

- Belief in the dignity and worth of all people.

- Commitment to a sense of equal justice based on a model of accommodation to provide and equalize the opportunities to participate in all rights and privileges available to all people; and a commitment to supporting persons with disabilities in advocacy activities to enable them to achieve this status and empower themselves.

- Emphasis on the holistic nature of human function which is procedurally facilitated by the utilization of such techniques as:
  1. interdisciplinary teamwork.
  2. counseling to assist in maintaining a holistic perspective.
  3. a commitment to considering individuals within the context of their family systems and communities.
- Recognition of the importance of focusing on the assets of the person.
- Commitment to models of service delivery that emphasize integrated, comprehensive services which are mutually planned by the consumer and the rehabilitation counselor.

III. Scope of Practice Statement

Rehabilitation counseling is a systematic process which assists persons with physical, mental, developmental, cognitive, and emotional disabilities to achieve their personal, career, and independent living goals in the most integrated setting possible through the application of the counseling process. The counseling process involves communication, goal setting, and beneficial growth or change through self-advocacy, psychological, vocational, social, and behavioral interventions. The specific techniques and modalities utilized within this rehabilitation counseling process may include, but are not limited to:

- assessment and appraisal:
- diagnosis and treatment planning:
- career (vocational) counseling:
- individual and group counseling treatment interventions focused on facilitating adjustments to the medical and psychosocial impact of disability;
- case management, referral, and service coordination;
- program evaluation and research;
- interventions to remove environmental, employment, and attitudinal barriers:
- consultation services among multiple parties and regulatory systems:
- job analysis, job development, and placement services, including assistance with employment and job accommodations; and
- the provision of consultation about, and access to, rehabilitation technology.

IV. Selected Definitions

The following definitions are provided to increase the understanding of certain key terms and concepts used in the Scope of Practice Statement for Rehabilitation Counseling.

Appraisal: Selecting, administering, scoring, and interpreting instruments designed to assess an individual’s attitudes, abilities, achievements, interests, personal characteristics, disabilities, and mental, emotional, or behavioral disorders as well as the use of methods and techniques for understanding human behavior in relation to coping with, adapting to, or changing life situations.

Diagnosis and Treatment Planning: Assessing, analyzing, and providing diagnostic descriptions of mental, emotional, or behavioral conditions or disabilities; exploring possible solutions; and developing and implementing a treatment plan for mental, emotional, and psychosocial adjustment or development. Diagnosis and treatment planning shall not be construed to permit the performance of any act which rehabilitation counselors are not educated and trained to perform.

Counseling Treatment Intervention: The application of cognitive, affective, behavioral, and systemic counseling strategies which include developmental, wellness, pathologic, and multicultural principles of human behavior. Such interventions are specifically implemented in the context of a professional counseling relationship and may include, but are not limited to: appraisal; individual group, manage, and family counseling and psychotherapy; the diagnostic description and treatment of persons with mental, emotional, and behavioral disorders or disabilities; guidance and consulting to facilitate normal growth and development, including educational and career development; the utilization of functional assessments and career counseling for persons requesting assistance in adjusting to a disability or handicapping condition; referrals; consulting; and research.

Referral: Evaluating and identifying the needs of a counselee to determine the advisability of referrals to other specialists, advising the counselee of such judgments, and communicating as requested or deemed appropriate to such referral sources.

Case Management: A systematic process merging counseling and managerial concepts and skills through the application of techniques derived from intuitive and researched methods, thereby advancing efficient and effective decision-making for functional control of self, client, setting, and other relevant factors for anchoring a proactive practice. In case management, the counselor’s role is focused on interviewing, counseling, planning rehabilitation programs, coordinating services, interacting with significant others, placing clients and following up with them, monitoring a client’s progress, and solving problems.

Program Evaluation: The effort to determine what changes occur as a result of a planned program by comparing actual changes (results) with desired changes (stated goals), and by identifying the degree to which the activity (planned program) is responsible for those changes.

Research: A systematic effort to collect, analyze, and interpret quantitative or qualitative data that describe how social characteristics, behavior, emotions, cognition, disabilities, mental disorders, and interpersonal transactions among individuals and organizations interact.

---

Share your Suggestions for Other Public Awareness Projects and Activities!

If you’ve carried out a public awareness project that you think other professional counselors might be interested in using, we hope you will take a few minutes to share it with us. This guide is a work in progress, and we’d like to add your ideas and suggestions for other activities. We’re also interested in including copies of brochures and other public awareness materials that you have developed. Please share your success stories, suggestions, and ideas with Janice Macdonald, ACA Director of Professional Services and Special Projects, by calling (800) 347-6647, ext. 204, or by writing the American Counseling Association, 5999 Stevenson Avenue, Alexandria, VA 22304.